Business Organizations and Transactions

Business Organizations

The form of business chosen for a business entity potentially affects every aspect of its operations. Treiser Collins assists clients in the formation and business planning and in deciding whether they want to operate as a closely held business, limited liability company, partnership, or corporation. The lawyers advise clients about such issues as directors' and officers' liability, dissolution, joint ventures, business successions, and shareholders' rights.

Business Transactions

Treiser Collin's business transactions group represents and advises individual and corporate clients in connection with a wide range of business transactions. The group is typically involved in transactions ranging from the formation and financing of new business ventures to issues concerning corporate, corporate governance, corporate finance, mergers and acquisitions, government relations, real estate, restructuring and insolvency, private equity investments, federal and state taxation, executive compensation arrangements, employee benefits, and wealth planning.
